Christopher Kelly is the founding principal of the Wellington based practice Architecture Workshop. His career, which is equal parts local and global has included working as a project architect on Renzo Piano's billion dollar Kansai Air Terminal, leading the construction documentation for the air terminal from the Osaka office.

For the 2018 Ted McCoy lecture, Kelly will discuss three of Architecture Workshop's most recent projects in relation to German philosopher Gottfried Semper's engagement with the earth and the lightweight use of innovative engineered timber.
